GRAFITTI TUNNEL, LONDON

ONCE UPON A TIME, unleashing a torrent of spray paint onto public property might have earned you a stint at Her Majesty's pleasure. However, London is now quite literally spotlighting its urban art by bestowing gallery-quality lighting onto some of its most famously graffitied streets. Thanks to a hook-up with local design agency Nulty, the 300m-long stretch inside Waterloo's Leake Street arches, a haven for international street artists – including Banksy – is aglow with illuminations worthy of Picasso. Enjoy the spray, baes.
